

Everjobs launches in Ethiopia

African's online career portal, Everjobs, have officially launched operations in Ethiopia. The company aims to simplify the job search and hiring process by connecting professionals with employers in a matter of clicks, acting as a key driving force in redirecting Ethiopia's best talent to international companies as well as small local enterprises (SME's).

At a press conference in Addis Ababa to officially introduce the company to the public, Eric Lauer, Co-founder and Managing Director at Everjobs Africa, said, "Overall in Ethiopia we are seeing a growing number of opportunities in the areas of Engineering, Manufacturing, Services, NGOs and in the public sector. Even though agriculture remains the highest employer of labour in the country, we are seeing a growing number of opportunities in the services sector with the sector contributing about 40% to GDP."

"Everjobs is here to help create the perfect match between professionals and employers," said Lauer. The site reduces delays in hiring, creates transparency and is available to anyone.

There are currently more than 300 career opportunities from about a hundred employers on the Everjobs platform.
