

codeX holds Code Quest: the search for young talent is on

Are you looking for a 21st-century career with great pay and endless opportunities? Do you love phones, computers, the internet and apps? Do you want to build things and/or take apart stuff to see how it works? Do you want the training of the highest quality in the shortest amount of time?

Elizabeth Gould, codeX

Meet codeX, the full-time, year-long apprenticeship programme that trains young, talented minds to build real software in a fraction of the time it takes to get a university degree.

On Saturday, 7 November, we are hosting a Code Quest for promising young talent in Cape Town at the V&A Waterfront from 10am to 2pm, to come and see if codeX is right for them. Attendees will:

- Get introduced to coding through fun games
- Learn how to control robots using code
- Meet our current coders and hear about their experiences in each term of the program
- Get first-hand accounts of life as a developer from coders already in the industry
- Begin the application process if you're sure that coding is the right career choice for you

Please note: codeX is only taking 50 potential coders-to-be for this event (parents welcome).
