Apparently, middle fingers just won't do as insults in South Africa's Parliament anymore.

On Tuesday, during President Cyril Ramaphosa's Q&A session, everyone's favourite subject on Twitter for the past month Malusi Gigaba hit Mbuyiseni Ndlozi with a pinky finger gesture after the EFF member suggested that ministers get phones that have no camera and cannot be hacked.

"It can't even be hacked this phone. Can I come maybe give it to you so you have a model of what phones might be critical for honourable Cabinet members?" Ndlozi added, making reference to Gigaba's leaked sex tape.

Gigaba, not amused, responded with this.

“ Another L for #Gigaba     pic.twitter.com/k3vMqHKx1z— taps (@tapsyee) November 6, 2018 ”

Gigaba later apologised, suggesting that the gesture indeed played into a discourse of toxic masculinity. Basically, yes. Parliament has devolved into a literal dick measuring contest.

"I apologise, unreservedly, for this gesture. The petty taunts that provoked it and the strain I have been taking, over the past 10 days, are no excuse for my indiscretion," he tweeted.

People aren't buying it though.

“ Heavens. Gigaba is now playing the victim card...which apparently excuses his disgusting behaviour in the NA yesterday.— Dianne Kohler Barnard (@DKB20) November 7, 2018 ”

While others were asking the real questions.

“ How does #Gigaba know the size of Ndlozi's pipiliza? pic.twitter.com/cCUtYKpytV— Portia Gumede (@portiagumede) November 6, 2018 ”
