

Stay woke and grow your business

20 Mar 2019

You don't have to shy away from using your social awareness or 'wokeness' to grow your business. In fact, it might do better if you do.

Tarryn Abrahams, founder, Boudoir Box.

This is according to Tarryn Abrahams, founder of lingerie subscription service Boudoir Box, who presented a seminar at the recent Seamless Southern Africa conference in Cape Town.

"When I started my business I didn't just want to be wildly successful, I also wanted to be a voice for the unheard and a champion for social cohesion," she says.

Just do it

She advises brands to take a cue from British-American author Simon Sinek, who in a 2009 Ted Talk, said: "People don't buy what you do; they buy why you do it."

Abrahams uses the Pepsi-Kendall Jenner debacle in comparison to Nike's effective use of Colin Kaepernick, and its subsequent sales spike and social media growth, as an example of how to get it right.

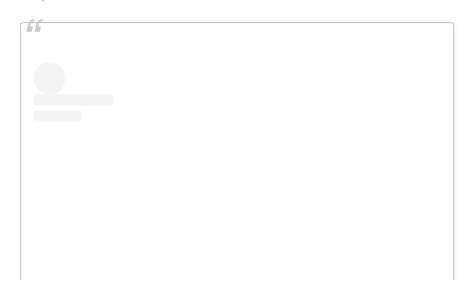

#FairnessFirst: How Nike inspires others to 'just do it' with commodity activism

Leigh Andrews 17 Sep 2018

<

By using her social awareness to aid her own business in 2017, Boudoir Box more than doubled its sales when they paired up with Femme (Freedom of Education Motivates Empowerment) Projects.

The collaboration involves the sale (with all of the proceeds going to Femme) of an exclusive t-shirt, designed by visual artist Lady Skollie that celebrates the vulva, to advance sexual health education in communities.

View this post on Instagram

What a glorious month Its been collaborating with people we admire, respect, and now, are proud to call our friends �� @femmeprojects #cyclescampaign Tees, jewellery and panties will still be available on our online shop in the coming months so call your friends and make it rain for reproductive health education in our under-resourced communities ���♥□ #community #boudoirbox #localartwork #intersectionalfeminism #wearableart

A post shared by BoudoirBox (@boudoirboxsa) on Jul 4, 2018 at 10:53pm PDT

"

Quality over quantity

"Generation Z is fast becoming the dictating voice. This means that quality over quantity is the deciding factor when making purchases. Despite being the poorest generation, Gen Z is reshaping the way brands operate and, in the process, give rise to high value and high returns," she says.

She adds that Gen Z isn't asking for much. "It doesn't have to be as fancy as an over-the-top ad campaign or product, it can be as simple as the number of women of colour and non-binary people employed by your brand, equal and fair pay or how you handle instances of sexual harassment."

#SeamlessSA: How Ramona Kasavan is taking Mimi Women to the rest of Africa

While it may risky to weave your social awareness into your business, Abrahams says the benefits outweigh the risks. And in the process, you are able to impact and shape society. "We have the potential to become agents of change and change the way people think for the betterment of society," she says.

Abrahams returns to Sinek's Ted Talk and says "You sell to people who believe what you believe. What you do merely serves as proof of what you believe."

But she warns that it has to be sincere: "Trust me, we can tell when it's forced."

ABOUT MAROEFAH SMITH

Enthusiastic UCT graduate with a passion for fashion, filmand words

- "What the latest technological innovation means for the future of retail 2 Jul 2019
 "#SourceAfrica2019: What to know for womenswear S/S 2020 26 Jun 2019
- #SourceAfrica2019: What's trending for menswear in S/S 2020? 20 Jun 2019
- #SourceAfrica2019: WGSNs 6 key strategies for developing S/S 2020 collections 19 Jun 2019
- #AfricaMonth: Pan-African web series gives Maybelline New York an African flair 30 May 2019

View my profile and articles...

For more, visit: https://www.bizcommunity.com