

WWF-SA launches ambitious climate project

WWF South Africa (WWF-SA) has launched a new four-year Climate Ambition to Accountability Project (CAAP) to encourage active participation in tackling climate change and influencing South Africa's climate policy.

Source: Pexels

WWF-SA, together with the South African Climate Action Network (Sacan) and the Institute for Economic Justice (IEJ), will work closely with environmental and social civil society organisations (CSOs) to build a strong cross-cutting community, including a cohort of youth climate champions.

The project, co-funded by the European Union, will focus on ensuring implementation and accountability for ambitious climate policy. It will also set up a CSO Climate Action Secretariat, empower youth through training boot camps and conduct primary research for facilitating evidence-based policymaking.

COP26 on climate: Top priorities for Africa

Tanguy Gahouma-Bekale 26 Jul 2021

Dr Prabhat Upadhyaya, senior policy analyst at WWF-SA, commented: "It is pertinent that we shift the narrative from talking about plans - what ought to be, to talking about implementation and accountability - what is.

“There is no room for dithering, doubting and denying anymore. Like Covid, climate change is here and now, to be or not to be ready is the question.”

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>