Leadership announcements for other Europe and Africa markets will be announced in due course.

“BCW Africa is one of the jewels in our Europe and Africa region and in Robyn (De Villiers), we have a hugely talented and experienced leader. I had the pleasure of working with Robyn ahead of the BCW merger so have first-hand experience of the capabilities of Robyn and her team.

“Looking forward, our strength across Africa means we are able to extend the depth and breadth of talents and capabilities we are able to offer our clients,” added Wilson.

“The successful track records and proven expertise of BCW’s leadership team in the Europe and Africa region will propel us towards our goal of becoming the pre-eminent integrated communications agency in the world,” said Donna Imperato, global CEO, BCW.

Talent

Wilson added: “Since our merger was announced, I have had the opportunity to see at first hand the depth and breadth of talents at our disposal here in Europe and Africa. Having been with Cohn & Wolfe since 2010, the capabilities of the C&W network were obviously well known to me.

“Now, having had the time to see the complementary talents and skills within the legacy Burson-Marsteller network, I am genuinely excited about what we can achieve in making BCW a truly great place to work for our teams and an even stronger integrated marketing communications partner to our clients.

“The level of interest and excitement in the new BCW has been incredible; clients and prospects across the region have been so positive that we are facing a significant uptick in new business and client referrals. As we look to accelerate our integration in the second half of this year, the future for BCW in Europe and Africa looks incredibly bright.”
