

Pioneer Foods recalls LiquiFruit and Ceres apple juice products

Pioneer Foods is recalling certain 100% apple juice products, sold under its LiquiFruit brand in South Africa, Botswana and Namibia, and the Ceres brand in other jurisdictions. No Ceres products sold in South Africa are affected by the recall.

An internal investigation by the food and beverage company revealed that a limited quantity of apple juice concentrate supplied to Pioneer Foods contained elevated levels of patulin. Patulin is a naturally occurring mycotoxin commonly associated with apples. The recall is based on the presence of this mycotoxin (patulin) exceeding 50 parts per billion (microgram/kg) which is the regulatory threshold.

CEO Tertius Carstens said, “The health and wellbeing of our consumers is of absolute importance to us, and hence when we identified the potential of a food safety issue, following in-house standard testing and engagement with one of our local suppliers, we immediately launched an internal investigation into all our 100% apple juice products.

“We have taken the decision, as a precautionary measure and with the interests of our consumers at heart, to launch a recall of products produced from the apple juice concentrate batch in question.”

The Pioneer Foods recall comes a week after Coca-Cola South Africa announced the voluntary recall of certain batches of Appletiser, also reportedly due to higher than acceptable level of patulin.
